

Facilitative Mediation & Conflict Resolution Training

Since 2008 Australia has been regulated by the National Mediator Accreditation System (NMAS), which has established a voluntary industry standard for best practice of facilitative and evaluative mediation.

PaCSIA and Silky Oaks have partnered to deliver a 5 day interactive mediation training program, which is developed to meet the requirements of the NMAS Approval Standards.

This program will provide practitioners with the knowledge, skills and understanding of ethical practice requirements to perform mediation services and to go on to obtain their NMAS accreditation if desired.

Join us for an intense, interactive workshop which balances practical skills with a thorough overview of theories that underpin conflict resolution and mediation.

* NMAS accreditation is not included in this course.
